

THE HOUSE OF TWO LIVES

Modular Structure for D&D 5e

A ready-to-use location designed to fit investigation, horror, urban intrigue, exploration, or compact dungeon play.

Concept

The House of Two Lives is a two-story building with a basement level.

Its strength lies in how easily it can be reinterpreted as:

- noble manor
- guild safehouse
- countryside villa
- abandoned house
- occult laboratory
- compact dungeon
- villain headquarters

The DM can decide whether the place is alive and inhabited, abandoned and decaying, or tainted by something far darker.

CORE STRUCTURE

Ground Floor

Main Entrance

Large double doors, spacious foyer, central staircase.

Flexible use

- noble reception
 - guard post
 - haunted threshold
 - opening trap scene
-

Common Hall

A wide central room with a long table.

Flexible use

- council chamber
 - dining hall
 - ritual site
 - social encounter
 - opening combat
-

Side Study

A smaller room with a desk and shelves.

Flexible use

- archive
 - clue room
 - villain's office
 - hidden journal
 - partial dungeon map
-

Upper Floor

Master Chamber

A large room with balcony access.

Flexible use

- noble's room
 - wizard retreat
 - vampire resting chamber
 - important NPC quarters
-

Secondary Room

A smaller and simpler chamber.

Flexible use

- servant room
- guest room
- prisoner holding

- false treasure room
-

Basement

Cellar or Crypt

This is the strongest part of the structure.

It can become:

- wine cellar
 - laboratory
 - vault
 - prison cell
 - crypt
 - monster lair
 - tunnel access point
-

5 QUICK USE IDEAS

1. Noble manor with a murder mystery.
 2. Rakshasa safehouse under false identity.
 3. Hidden base of a moon cult.
 4. Abandoned villa haunted by memories.
 5. Compact urban dungeon.
-

3 READY SECRETS

1. One upstairs room only appears on certain nights.
 2. The basement is larger on the inside.
 3. One mirror shows the building's past.
-

Final note for the DM

This structure is designed to be solid in form yet free in interpretation.

It can serve as a social building, hideout, mini dungeon, or boss lair without changing the base layout.